WIT VS WEISS

- German Weissbier -

Weissbier has a low to moderately strong banana and clove flavour. There are three more commonly known weizen beers: The unfiltered hefe, meaning yeast, with noticeable sediment and a hazy appearance. The filtered Kristallweizen whereby the suspended yeast and wheat protein are removed and then the dark weiss styles are also available known as dunkelweizen where a darker malt is used.

- Belgian Witbier -

Witbier has a pleasant sweetness and a zesty, orange-citrusy fruitiness. It gets its name from the suspended yeast and wheat proteins, which make the beer look white when cold. This style originated without the use of any hops, instead fruits and spices were used. Today the style tends to use orange peel and coriander along with a light bit of hops for aroma and flavouring

ALES VS LAGERS:THE DIFFERENCE

All beers are either ales or lagers. Ales being the older, more distinguished and traditional style, predating lagers by thousands of years. Lagers are seen as a relatively modern creation.

Ales are traditionally brewed at higher temperatures with top fermenting yeast, where Lagers are brewed at cooler temperatures while using a bottom fermenting yeast.
